Sutton Estate Dr.

6003 Lakehurst Road

Woodbrook, Baltimore County

Circa 1830

Private

Sutton Estate, constructed circa 1830, is located near the area called Woodbrook in the Ninth District of Baltimore County. In 1877, the Ninth District was a total of only 38.9 square miles, however, it contained the largest population at the time. The Ninth District includes the upper suburbs of Baltimore City, and is bordered by the Third, Eighth, Eleventh and Twelfth Districts. In 1870, the district had a population of 10,731 and a decade following it doubled in size with a total of 21,414 people. The Sutton Estate is shown on the Hopkins Atlas of 1877 as J.L. Sutton's estate. It is centered between Narrow Gauge Railroad and the Green Spring Junction of the Northern Central Railway. On the Bromley Atlas of 1915, this property is called "Overlook" and is owned by H.C. McComas.

The Sutton Estate dwelling is sited in a suburban area on a sloping lot with landscaping, mature trees and shrubs, foundation plantings. A paved driveway leads to the rear garages. The original house to the Sutton Estate was built circa 1830 and features an L-shaped footprint. It measures two stories in height and three bays across, and constructed of random-rubble stone. The 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows are supported with wood sills and stone lintels. The off-center entrance features a recessed double-leaf wood paneled door illuminated with 3-light sidelights and a six-light transom. The entire dwelling was remodeled by Cochran, circa 1950, into a Bauhaus-style condominium. The additions are comprised of brick sections and frame sections clad with corrugated sheet metal. The windows are 1-light metal casement with 1-light metal transoms. The roof of the stone dwelling was replaced with a flat roof to accommodate the flat roof addition. A two-story addition of the same design was attached with a hyphen to the original dwelling. At 6009 Overlook Place are the stables associated with the Sutton Estate.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Sutton Estate dwelling is sited in a suburban area on a sloping lot with landscaping, mature trees and shrubs, foundation plantings. A paved driveway leads to the rear garages. The original house to the Sutton Estate was built circa 1830 and features an L-shaped footprint. It measures two stories in height and three bays across, and constructed of random-rubble stone. The 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows are supported with wood sills and stone lintels. The off-center entrance features a recessed double-leaf wood paneled door illuminated with 3-light sidelights and a six-light transom. The entire dwelling was remodeled by Cochran, circa 1950, into a Bauhaus-style condominium. The additions are comprised of brick sections and frame sections clad with corrugated sheet metal. The windows are 1-light metal casement with 1-light metal transoms. The roof of the stone dwelling was replaced with a flat roof to accommodate the flat roof addition. A two-story addition of the same design was attached with a hyphen to the original dwelling.

At 6009 Overlook Place are the stables associated with the Sutton Estate. The main stable, circa 1870, has been renovated into a single-family dwelling. This dwelling is one-and-a-half-stories in height and four bays wide. It is constructed of wood frame clad in board-and-batten siding, and is resting on a solid random-rubble stone foundation. The windows are 6/6 double-hung wood sash and there are three entries on the façade. The main entry contains a single-leaf paneled wood door. The two secondary entries contain double-leaf wood doors paneled with lights. The second story features four wall dormers. Rising above the asphalt-shingle pyramidal roof is one center-interior brick chimney. Across the façade of the original stable is a one-story porch supported with square wood posts ornamented with brackets. Features of the building include shallow pedimented window surrounds, overhanging eaves, and a boxed wood cornice. A one-story wood-frame addition was constructed on the southeast elevation. The addition has one exterior-end brick chimney. To the rear of the stable is a wood-frame, circa 1900 garage. The garage is two-stories and two bays wide and clad in board-and-batten siding. It has one roll-up door (not visible) and one double-leaf board-and-batten door on the first story. The second story has two single-leaf board-and-batten doors. It is capped with a flat roof, and features overhanging eaves pedimented wood surrounds. A one-story shed addition on the façade features exposed roof rafters.

Directly to the rear of the original house are two circa 1990 brick garages. Both are one-story and six bays wide with a flat roof and constructed in a 5-course Flemish bond.

A modern renovation has destroyed the original character of the building, however, its original walls of native stone still stand as testimony of the importance of that mode of housebuilding in this region. Some interior details such as mouldings and mantelpieces suggest that it was once a substantial and fashionable Victorian home in the third quarter of the 19th century.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Hopkins Atlas of 1877 and the chain of title suggest that between 1865 and 1887 this house was the main house of the J.L. Sutton estate.

Mid-20th century development has irradicated many early structures in Baltimore County and it has left many rural buildings crowded in among the more recent products of suburbia. This 19th century stone dwelling is one of them and its case is made sadder by an apartment renovation which altered it nearly beyond recognition.

Other than the main entrance (West) and the stone walls left exposed there is little on the exterior suggestive of the original appearance. It is possible that in its original state the building resembled the "Blue Stone" building of H. B. Chew in Towson (see BA # 206). The walls of this building are constructed of various shades of gray and brown fieldstone with an attempt at coursing. On the west facade one can see very tall windows with massive stone lintels. These are 6/9 sash (may have been triple hung) measuring 3 feet by 7 feet.

Because of the sloping site the north facade, which is three bays long with a full basement, has the appearance of three stories. Its east bay projects out 3 feet. Pairs of tall and narrow 4/4 windows vent this side on the first level and they exist beneath a common lintel. Shorter windows vent the upper level. The east bay has its lower level hidden by a brick addition. That portion which is exposed shows the fenestration of this side to be characterized by the location of an interior chimney in the north bay. Although the lintels match the others in the building the windows have been altered. A non-functional lintel and blocked-in doorway suggest the removal of a gallery.

There is original fabric on the interior. Only the first floor hall and basement were examined but a tenant familiar with the building reports the existence of fireplaces and mantels. What is perceived to have been a central hall is 10 feet wide with 11 foot ceilings and 5 foot high raised panel wainscot. A very wide and complex ogee baseboard trims the base. It is entered through an entrance with double doors, sidelights and a transom. The doors are decorated with raised mouldings that form large "key hole" motifs with floral patterns in the corners.

The parlors on either side of the hall are/were reached by double doorways 5½ feet in width and 7½ feet high. They are transomed.

The stair area is set off from the entrance area by an archway that has a sculptured cartouche-like key and inset panels.

The original plan of the house can be seen in the basement. It is a full basement exhibiting the same construction as the upper exterior walls. Solid rectangular chimney supports are visible but no "cooking fireplace." While a hewn lintel exists over one doorway the floor joists are mechanically vertically sawn. Bracing contains cut nails, however, and random width flooring can be seen in places.

Also included in the Sutton Estate is a stable which has been converted into a house and now stands on a separate parcel. This 2 story board-and-batten structure rests on a high stone foundation and is topped with a hipped roof. The nearly square main block which is built into a hill is four bays wide by a wide three bays long. Presently, the main or south facade is covered by a single story porch. The fenestration is a regular 6/6 sash. Pedimented ends of the upper story "dormers" pierce the wide eaves of the roof.
